Northeast Planting Guide

Cool-Season Grass Seed – Zones 6, 7 & 8

When daytime air temperatures are lower than 55 degrees and frost is imminent, it's too late to plant cool-season grass seed. Cool season grasses grow best at daytime air temperatures between 60 degrees and 75 degrees, which is when the soil temperatures range from 50 to 65 degrees. At colder temperatures, though germination may occur, frost can injure and even kill seedlings.

Per Ryegrass

Ky Bluegrass

Seed cool weather grass seeds in late summer to early fall. This gives these grasses the best chance of survival. They don't have to deal with the heat of the summer and established grass will start going dormant soon which will give your growing seeds a better chance of grabbing up essential nutrients.

This is a simplified version of the USDA map. The full version outlines temperature changes for the entire country. The map will help determine when the last frost should be in your area and when temperatures will be optimal to start planting grass.

Researchers at the National Turfgrass Evaluation Program \(NTEP\) have done copious amounts of research on the best time to plant grass seed. To make their research a little less confusing we've converted their data into an easy-to-read chart. The chart breaks down the best choices for grass type in your state as well as when to plant and what your USNA and USDA regions are.

When To Plant Grass Seed
State	Best Time To Plant	Best Type of Grass	USNA/USDA Zone
Delaware	Early Fall & Early Spring/Summer	Kentucky Bluegrass, Rye, Fescue/Zoysia	C,H & Tr/7
Maine	Early Fall & Early Spring	Kentucky Bluegrass	C,H/3-5
